Course Content	This course examines the development of art from the Neoclassical period to Contemporary Art, focusing on the major artistic movements that shaped modern visual culture. It begins with Neoclassicism and Romanticism, exploring how Enlightenment ideas, industrialization, and political revolutions influenced artistic expression and led to new approaches in style, subject matter, and representation. The course continues with Realism, Impressionism, Post-Impressionism, and early Modernism, highlighting the transformation of artistic perception in response to rapid social and technological changes in the 19th and early 20th centuries. Students will study how artists began to break away from academic traditions and experimented with new techniques, perspectives, and visual languages. Modern and avant-garde movements such as Cubism, Expressionism, Surrealism, Dada, and Abstract Art will also be examined in relation to philosophical, psychological, and political developments of the 20th century. Special attention is given to how these movements challenged traditional definitions of art and expanded its boundaries. Finally, the course addresses Postmodern and Contemporary Art practices, including installation, performance, conceptual art, photography, and digital media. Students will explore how globalization, technology, identity politics, and cultural diversity have shaped contemporary artistic production. Through visual analysis and critical discussion, students will develop an understanding of the dynamic and interdisciplinary nature of modern and contemporary art.
